Dear Mr. and Mrs. Evans,

We live a block away from you, at 98 Somerset Lane. Our twelve-year-old Shetland sheepdog loves to roam our fenced-in yard; it's his territory to protect. I'm sorry to say, though, that for the past few weeks your son has decided it is entertaining to stop at the fence and tease our dog. Shetland sheepdogs are very gentle, but they can be easily annoyed, and your boy has figured out exactly how to do so. I have tried to ask the boy to stop several times, but he just ran away. I am asking that you explain to your child that his behavior is inappropriate. I hope we can deal with this quickly and politely.

Sincerely,
Susan Burke

It was a pretty dress. Mom had put handmade lace around the neck and sleeves. I had never had such a wonderful dress. The dress was hung where I could see it as I helped Mom get the food ready for the picnic. I was so excited that I wasn't really much help, but Mom understood how I felt. I dreamed of nothing but that picnic and the new dress. The night before the big day, I began to feel funny. My throat felt sore and my head hurt; however, I thought it best not to say anything to Mom. Nothing was going to spoil that picnic. But when morning came, the dreadful truth was known. I was sick. I struggled bravely to the table, but Mom took one look and announced, "Sophia is sick, honey. You'll have to take the boys and go on to the picnic. I'll stay home with her." Oh, what a terrible reality not to be able to wear that beautiful dress!

If you look at the stock market during the last 50 years, yes, you see a jagged line with many ups and downs (some with long and dramatic declines, as in the Great Recession of 2007); however, more importantly, you see that the jagged line progresses steadily upward. From this long-term perspective, putting your money in the stock market — and keeping it there during downswings — is a good investment. Looking at your sports involvement with the same long-term view would show a similar upward trend throughout time and an equally good commitment of your time and energy. As with the stock market, you shouldn't panic on those bad days and let them change your overall investment of time and energy in your sport.

21. 밑줄 친 keep people in their boxes and silos가 다음 글에서 의미하는 바로 가장 적절한 것은? [3점]

At the heart of twentieth-century management thinking is the notion of a corporation as an efficient steady-state machine aimed at exploiting its existing business model. As Google executives state in their book, How Google Works, “Traditional thinking dictates that you build up a sustainable competitive advantage over rivals and then close the fortress and defend it with boiling oil and flaming arrows.” The fortress is run from the top, with an assumption that the top knows best. As business school professor John Kotter notes, the fortress is built to minimize risk and keep people in their boxes and silos. People are working within a system that is designed to get today’s job done — a system that asks most people to be quiet, take orders, and do their jobs in a repetitive way. Exploitation of the existing business model takes precedence over the exploration of new possibilities.

- ① hire people with stable, long-term job contracts
- ② minimize the potential complaints from customers
- ③ require managers to analyze their own competitiveness
- ④ make people maintain their roles within pre-determined boundaries
- ⑤ maximize profit margins by reducing unexpected challenges from rivals

The argument that is probably used most often in favor of trade barriers is that they save jobs at home. Labor unions make this argument, of course. Much of the general population agrees with it, too, or at least with the notion that we’re losing too many of our jobs to foreign nations. But are we really losing jobs abroad because of free trade? Certainly, but not as many as people often believe. Technological changes have played a much larger role in transforming our domestic labor markets than free trade has, and most of the jobs we export abroad are low-skilled to no-skilled jobs, which go to countries that have a comparative advantage in production requiring low-skilled labor. The pain is intense, of course, for those people who have lost factory jobs because their companies moved their production facilities abroad. People in that situation are bound to feel anger and resentment toward the government for pursuing free trade and entering into agreements like NAFTA. Still, protectionist measures like tariffs and quotas won’t do anything to prevent job losses that are brought about by technological change.

Often, we look at a slope with the unaided eye and think the slope is much more gradual than it really is. In fact, the ground actually falls away at a much steeper rate than the human eye can easily see. What we think is level can actually be sloping down more steeply than our eyes can perceive. Conversely, if we are looking uphill, what our eyes tell us is level is actually more uphill than we think. Sometimes my clients who go out to visit properties without a sight level will tell me, “We’ve got a level lot.” I’ll go out there with my trusty sight level and discover that if they built a house on that lot, they would actually have a walk-out basement! The unaided eye is great for a million other things but is not a good instrument for measuring gradients or slopes on pieces of property. I look at building sites all the time, and I still get fooled by this optical illusion.

* sight level: 시야 수평 측정기  gradient: 경사도

- ① building styles that please the human eye
- ② considerations when building a basement
- ③ the necessity of building a house on a level lot
- ④ the importance of a good view for selling a house
- ⑤ the inability of the naked eye to accurately evaluate slopes

We are not attentive to the fact that often we are presented with filtered information to suit our pre-established beliefs. This is how it works: when you enter a search term into Google or another search engine, you get results that have been customized for you, according to your past searches and web activity. In other words, if you are a Democrat searching for the latest statistics on the U.S. presidential debate, your search will most likely present news articles and blogs from Democrats who think the Democratic candidate did fantastically. The links will include news websites and opinion blogs you have visited previously and others associated with them. Given that the first twenty results you get all praise the performance of the Democratic candidate, you are left with the impression that she or he indeed delivered an outstanding performance. Everyone seems to think so. In fact, your Twitter and Facebook feeds provide further evidence of the superiority of your candidate, making you more and more confident of the upcoming election result.

Ten Countries' Tourism Density Index in 2017

Country	Tourist/Local Ratio	Number of Locals	Number of Tourists
Croatia	13.81	4,170,600	57,587,000
Iceland	5.66	334,250	1,891,000
Hungary	5.39	9,817,960	52,890,000
Denmark	5.01	5,731,120	28,692,000
France	3.03	66,896,110	202,930,000
Czech Republic	2.93	10,561,630	30,915,000
Singapore	2.93	5,607,280	16,404,000
Cyprus	2.81	1,170,130	3,286,000
Greece	2.61	10,746,740	28,071,000
Spain	2.49	46,443,960	115,561,000

The table above compares the number of tourists to the number of locals in the selected ten countries in 2017. ① Of the ten countries, France had the highest number of both locals and tourists, but its tourist-to-local ratio ranked fifth, with a ratio of 3.03. ② Spain was right behind France in the number of both locals and tourists, but it had the lowest tourist-to-local ratio at 2.49. ③ Among the ten countries, Croatia had the highest tourist-to-local ratio, which was more than twice as high as Iceland's. ④ Half of the ten countries had a tourist-to-local ratio of more than three tourists per local. ⑤ Greece had a greater number of tourists than Singapore, and its tourist-to-local ratio was higher than that of Singapore.

26. Commonwealth Games에 관한 다음 글의 내용과 일치하지 않는 것은?

The Commonwealth Games is an international sporting event involving athletes from the Commonwealth of Nations. The event was first held in 1930 and has taken place every four years since then, only interrupted twice by the Second World War in 1942 and 1946. Only six nations have attended every Commonwealth Games: Australia, Canada, England, New Zealand, Scotland, and Wales. The games have only been hosted outside of these six nations three times: twice in Asia (Malaysia and India) and once in the Caribbean (Jamaica). Over the history of the Games, Australia has won the most Commonwealth medals. The greatest number of nations to compete at the Commonwealth Games was 72 at Manchester in 2002, and the greatest number of athletes to compete was 4,929 at Glasgow in 2014. The host city for the 2022 Commonwealth Games is Birmingham, located in the West Midlands of England.

- ① 첫 번째 대회는 1930년에 열렸다.
- ② 아시아 지역에서 두 번 개최되었다.
- ③ 대회 역사상 호주가 가장 많은 수의 메달을 획득했다.
- ④ 2002년 Manchester 대회에서 가장 많은 선수들이 참가했다.
- ⑤ 2022년 대회의 개최 도시는 Birmingham이다.

It will never be possible ① to establish the origins of human music with any certainty; however, it seems probable that music developed from the prosodic exchanges between mother and infant which foster the bond between them. From this, it became a form of communication between adult human beings. As the capacity for speech and conceptual thought developed, music became less important as a way of conveying information, but ② retained its significance as a way of communicating feelings and cementing bonds between individuals, especially in group situations. Today, we are so accustomed to considering the response of the individual to music ③ which we are liable to forget that, for most of its history, music has been predominantly a group activity. Music began by ④ serving communal purposes, of which religious ritual and warfare are two examples. It has continued to be ⑤ used as an accompaniment to collective activities; as an adjunct to social ceremonies and public occasions.

* prosodic: 운율적인  adjunct: 부속물, 부가물

Genes give us the foundation of our models. Experiences give us individual identities. Behaviors ① express our individual needs, desires, urges, attitudes, beliefs, and so on. In this way, all behaviors are purposeful. It is our job as supportive adults to find a ② constructive purpose. This does not mean that we should view violent behavior as resourceful; rather, we can enlist the core of violent behavior as a positive resource (e.g., Violent behavior may exemplify an ③ eagerness to take control, an ability to respond authoritatively, or a refusal to be victimized). Ask yourself in what context or situation the core of a particular behavior would ④ eliminate value. For example, “Your refusal to be victimized will help you grow more tolerant with people as you mature.” This comment orients the child toward a more fulfilling future because it ⑤ validates the child’s world view and enlists the core of the behavior as a positive resource.

31. Despite advances in desktop mapping software, which would empower reporters as mapmakers, news publishers tend to treat maps like photographs and other images — as illustrations developed by specialists working in an art department outside the news room. Some newspapers have a separate graphics department that is responsible for maps and other information graphics or a “graphics editor” who mediates between the news desk and the art department. Elsewhere the integration of illustrations and art relies on informal alliances — inviting the art director to the daily editorial meeting is a common concession. Because reporters and editors are rarely trained in graphic design and mapmaking, this _____ of labor is likely to persist. Even so, some newspapers committed to investigative reporting acquired a geographic information system and made the software available to reporters covering crime, elections, or the environment. The resulting maps are often team efforts involving reporters, editors, and graphics specialists. [3점]

* concession: 양해 사항, 양보

- ① division ② reduction ③ suspension
④ automation ⑤ standardization

32. The obvious problems being caused by economic growth have not been ignored by academics: they were noticed by some in the economics profession, who then attempted to incorporate these concerns into their discipline. This led to the development of environmental economics, and also the related study of natural-resource economics. Conventional economics considers environmental impact to be an “externality,” something outside its concern. Environmental economists were keen to bring these negative impacts back within the discipline. However, they still approached the subject in a scientific and measurement-based way, for example, using shadow pricing to measure how much people were concerned about noise pollution or the loss of habitat. In other words, the way in which economics traditionally marginalizes or ignores something that cannot be priced was still adhered to, but the response was to attempt to evaluate in some way aspects of life which economics had ignored. Green economists, on the other hand, would _____; in other words, they believe it is important to accept that some aspects of life have social or spiritual worth that simply cannot be measured. [3점]

* shadow pricing: 잠재 가격

- ① consider this to be a category error
② accept such scientific measurements
③ analyze all of the collected research data
④ strive to get rid of negative aspects in life
⑤ be reluctant to acknowledge economic benefits

33. It should be noted that exercise is beneficial to overall health and that regular, consistent exercise can help learning, so long as it is sustained over time. However, it was shown that in healthy, sedentary, young adults a single bout of exercise did not affect recognition memory and had nothing to do with coordinating hemispheres. Furthermore, studies reported no correlation between physical activity and academic performance in children, and a recent systematic review of 30 relevant studies reported no significant improvement in cognition with physical activity or exercise in adults, meaning the jury is still out on the precise amount and type of exercise that leads to the best results for school kids. Howard-Jones's literature review in 2014 showed that studies reported that exercise had either no effect, or a small positive effect in equal numbers, but no negative effects, meaning doing physical activity is definitely appropriate, but like the other studies, _____ . [3점]

* bout: 한 차례의, 한바탕의

- ① cognitive abilities vary among individuals
- ② no specific recommendations can be made
- ③ review results conflict with previous studies
- ④ exercise correlates with academic performance
- ⑤ forcing it only leads to significant stress increase

34. It is relatively easy to understand secessionist civil wars in West Africa, where ethnic groups fight to carve out their own new states. It is more difficult to understand West Africa's rebels without a cause, who want to take over the national government without a defined ideological platform, as in a nation-wide coup. The rebels claim that their aim is to introduce cleaner, fairer government, but because their own leaders are so often demonstrably corrupt, such claims appear implausible. But our interviews with the followers suggest that they are making a rational bet: either everyone will get to benefit from a fairer sharing of the spoils or at least they themselves will get to benefit because their side will have gained power and will be directing the spoils their way. Many join the rebels simply to protect their own home villages. Rebels have a very local perspective. They aim to take over national governments in the capital because this is still the way to control the distribution of the spoils. Good governance as an ideology may _____ . [3점]

* secessionist: 분리 독립을 지지하는  coup: 쿠데타  spoils: 전리품

- ① lead to increased productivity of labor
- ② differ at national, regional, and local levels
- ③ put economic interest ahead of local needs
- ④ mean national equity or just a new set of winners
- ⑤ be achieved by both the creation and use of legal systems

In sports, attendance is nearly always (98-99 percent of the time) with at least one other person. The sports fan pays a price for the right to enjoy an emotional experience with others. ① The fan goes to the game to be with others, to share the experience in this social exchange. ② More broadly speaking, unlike most other retail settings, large crowds have positive psychological effects. ③ No line at the grocery checkout will make most shoppers happy, but no line to see a ballgame is a definite hint to a fan either that this is a terrible sporting event or that the fan has arrived at the stadium on the wrong date. ④ The potential benefits of sport participation do not happen automatically; coaches must structure players' sport experience to help players gain these psychological benefits. ⑤ The excitement of the competition and the aura of the star power of the players on the team are such that the experience is best enjoyed in the presence of others.

* aura: 기운, 매력

Because scientific research is so often conducted in the interests of national defense or under the sponsorship of private firms that hope to profit from applications of the findings, the norms of common ownership and publication are often suspended.

- (A) In 2001, two rival groups raced to be the first to complete the research, one in the private sector, the Celera Genomics Corporation, led by J. Craig Venter, and the other a government-funded laboratory headed by Francis Collins. An argument raged over whether the private corporation was trying to establish patents on human genetic sequences, a violation of the norm of openness.
- (B) The public laboratory had, or claimed to have, no such business interest. Eventually the competing teams compromised and issued a joint publication of the map, but the controversy and legal battles over issuing patents for genetic material have continued.
- (C) Such situations have led to innumerable conflicts in scientific circles. An outstanding example is the race to publish the complete map and inventory of the human genome — all the sequences of human DNA that constitute our genes.

Through observing and learning from each other, we can learn various techniques necessary for survival in different environments. A good example of this is learning what to eat and what to avoid eating. There is evidence that other species base their food choices on what their con-specifics eat.

- (A) This type of social learning is clearly adaptive for omnivorous animals that need to carefully select between potentially poisonous and nutritious food options. Like rats, humans are omnivores and have faced similar challenges in learning what to eat.
- (B) For example, young rats prefer to search for food where other rats are eating, and prefer to eat the same food that other rats eat. Rats can even learn to select a new food item by smelling the breath of other rats.
- (C) One difference between humans and rats is that while rats have to rely on a relatively simple process of observation and social learning, humans can transmit a great deal more information culturally. We learn from our parents and other elders in our culture what to eat, how to eat, how to prepare food, and which food items to avoid.

Prior to the coming of the railroads, shipments of anything could not be accomplished during many months of the year, and other forms of moving goods were extremely slow and apt to be halted for days and weeks by conditions such as low water, muddy roads, and storms.

As railroads developed during the nineteenth century in the United States, they offered the world's first means of transportation that was largely resistant to the effects of bad weather and able to function throughout the year. (①) The development of the nation's rail network from 1840 through the 1890s brought reliable movement of people and goods throughout the nation, with many fewer seasonal impacts than happened to other existing forms of transportation, all of which suffered greatly with the weather's capriciousness. (②) Railroads now enabled farmers to get their harvested crops to market in a matter of days, whether they were shipped in July or January. (③) By contrast, except in extreme weather conditions, trains could be counted on to reach their destinations on time. (④) Even today, fog, heavy rain or snow and ice stop commercial aircraft operations and slow vehicular traffic, often causing multiple accidents. (⑤) But trains continue to operate in such conditions.

But the extinction of the Neanderthals does not show that they differed cognitively in important ways from us.

An important strand of work on Neanderthal extinction presupposes that Neanderthals were displaced by sapiens through some important sociocultural difference between Neanderthal and sapiens groups. In turn, this sociocultural difference was due to an intrinsic cognitive difference between sapiens and Neanderthal minds. (①) For example, Steven Mithen and others have argued that the Neanderthals lacked full human language. (②) It is indeed possible that there were significant cognitive differences between Moderns and Neanderthals. (③) Rather, it is likely that they were pushed over the brink by negative feedback loops between demography and environment. (④) These loops eroded the preconditions of high-volume social learning. (⑤) Just as Moderns illustrate the effects of crossing a positive threshold, Neanderthals may well illustrate the effects of crossing a negative threshold, after which they could not retain the informational resources needed for survival.

To a certain, though limited, extent the animal is capable of adjusting its behavior to a changing environment. Such unconventional modes of behavior are made possible by the animal's ability to form habits, also known as chained conditioned responses. Habits are conventional forms of behavior, too, yet they derive from the past experience of the individual, instead of being an innate gift of the species. A habit forms gradually as a result of the animal's repeated and stereotyped reaction to the same type of environmental change: wild animals learn to find their way back to places abundant in food, a dog may be trained to go shopping with a basket, and in the laboratory the rat learns its way through the maze and receives food as a reward. Circus training represents the peak achievement of the animal in terms of habit acquisition. Numerous habits form in man also, but a sudden change of external conditions may easily prove them ineffective. The point is that a habit is only a conventional form of adjustment to definite external conditions.

Through habit formation, animals show (A) to changing environments, but they may not be able to effectively re-form habits when there are (B) changes in the environment.

A good deal of empirical evidence supports the view that emotions, whether positive or negative, tend to be socially shared, and that the social sharing of emotions results in a strong emotional impact on the exposed person. An emotional experience (a) provokes a person to talk about it with others, as those affected attempt to understand and learn more about their experience. The more intense the personal emotions, the more likely it is that we will share them with others. Talking about an event is a form of rehearsal that may (b) aid memory because talking or translating an experience into language, seen as the social mechanism guiding memories, can help to organize and assimilate the event in people's minds. Language — as the primary symbol system that defines the framework for individuals' memories — is therefore “the (c) vehicle for important cognitive, and learning processes following an emotional upheaval.” The more an event provokes an emotion, the more it elicits social sharing and distinctly vivid, precise, (d) concrete memories of the event. This type of memory, known as flashbulb memory, is seen as being qualitatively different from ordinary memories and as superior in terms of time because this type of memory is assumed to be clearer and (e) more affected by time than other memories. Being a result of a surprising and emotionally intense event, a flashbulb memory is likely to be long-lasting.

It was back in 2008, when I gave my first talk to a corporate leadership audience. I had done many health talks, but the difference between those experiences and even just standing in the green room was clear. I was in a room with twenty other speakers, each of us waiting to be called to do our twenty-minute talk. When I heard the event organizers talking to the audience, I pulled back a small section of the heavy curtains that separated the green room from the auditorium and looked out.

Maybe it was the big smile, or his Australian accent, or the name Pete that made this guy trustworthy, but I turned to (a) him and said, “They did tell me it was a C-level audience. But I thought that meant ordinary, real sea-level people. S-E-A-level.” Through a huge laugh he said, “That’s brilliant! You should use that!” I pulled the curtain back one more time. I wanted to see the audience members’ faces. Then, like a slow motion scene from a movie, a bald guy turned to whisper something to the guy sitting next to (b) him, and I saw his face.

(C)

There were rows of mostly men in white shirts and dark suits. I shut the curtain and said, “Oh, my God. These are all businesspeople — executives.” One speaker standing closest to me chuckled. “Yeah, mate. It’s a conference for C-levels. Didn’t they tell you that? CEOs, CFOs, all executives.” The blood drained out of my face as I slowly sat down on the empty chair next to me. (c) He knelt next to me and put his arm on my shoulder. “You okay, mate?”

(D)

I gasped. I knew that guy. We used to go to the same meetings about ten years ago. As I sat there wondering if I was in the middle of a miracle, my new friend Pete walked up. “You’re doing okay?” (d) he asked. I smiled, “Yeah. I think so.” My speech was successful. The audience and I were deeply connected. After all, Pete was right, and I followed (e) his advice. We belly-laughed when I talked about the C-level episode. The audience leaned in so hard to what I was sharing about shame that they almost fell out of their seats.
